Spanish bank chief ends hush-hush visit

BEN-GURION AIRPORT. — The Governor of the Bank of Spain, Luis Coronel del Palma, said yesterday that he hoped there would soon be "a considerable improvement" in relations between Spain and Israel.

Mr. Coronel del Palma was speaking to reporters at the end of what was described as a three-day private visit to Israel as guest of Bank of Israel Governor Moshe Sanbar and Mrs. Sanbar. The visit had been kept confidential until yesterday.

"Many people in Spain would very much like to see an improvement in relations between Spain and Israel," he said, referring to the fact that Spain does not recognize Israel. "The new government (in Spain) is more open to contacts with other countries," he noted, explaining his hope that relations would soon improve.

He stressed that several weeks ago the Spanish Queen, just before she and King Juan Carlos left for the U.S., visited the main synagogue in Madrid. Furthermore, while the royal couple were in New York they met with U.S. Jewish leaders on matters which included Israel-Spain relations.

Referring to his visit here, the Spanish official said he had discussed various monetary problems with Mr. Sanbar.

His and his wife's stay had been short, but they had managed to see not only the Israel of antiquities and Christian holy places but something of Israel's modern history and its dynamism. He was especially impressed with kibbutz life, which he had seen at Ginosar (home of Foreign Minister Yigal Alon).

Mr. Coronel del Palma also met with Y'acov Tsur, chairman of the Israel-Arab Institute, and said he would work to establish a similar institute in Madrid to increase knowledge of Israel in Spain.

The governor was accompanied by the secretary-general of the Spanish central bank, Augustin de Alcocer, and his wife. Mr. Alcocer explained to reporters that his name indicated his family was of Jewish origin.

Amin frees the hijacked Airbus

PARIS. — The Air France Airbus which was hijacked to Entebbe was due to reach Paris last night after being released by Uganda's President Amin "with no strings attached."

Idi Amin, according to reports from Kampala, yesterday informed French Ambassador in Uganda, Pierre Renard, "the plane is free to take off" whenever the company was ready.

A French crew was flying the plane to Paris.

Unofficial reports here say that Air France has agreed to pay Amin half a million francs (about $1.1m.) for the upkeep of the hostages at Entebbe Airport. This would represent a cost of 200 francs (IL400) per final and an equivalent sum for their accommodation, which actually consisted of a blanket and a pillow in the best of cases.

French officials are nonetheless pleased that the Airbus "case" has been settled and they consider the matter as "closed." These officials say Amin told the French envoy he had released the plane "in view of the good relations existing between Paris and Kampala."

Arafat losing control as PLO fortunes sink

By WOLF BLITZER
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — The Palestine Liberation Organization is threatened with dismemberment, and its leader Yasser Arafat, has lost almost all control of his forces.

Because of events in Lebanon many American experts believe the terrorist organization may have ceased to be a serious factor in the quest for a Middle East settlement.

When Jordan's King Hussein visited Washington earlier this year for talks with President Ford, Secretary of State Kissinger and other top American officials, the escalating war in Lebanon overshadowed everything else. The Americans had originally hoped to sound out the monarch on the prospects of entering into negotiations with Israel, but there was not much time for discussing the diplomatic process.

Ford and Kissinger were very worried that the situation in Lebanon could ignite a confrontation between Israel and Syria, and they enlisted Hussein's support in coordinating positions with Syrian President Assad. At America's request, Hussein spent much of his time on the telephone between Washington and Damascus.

During his private conversations with the Americans, Hussein quickly took the role of Assad's lawyer, defending and praising the Syrian leader. The king, who obviously still has vivid recollections of the bloody 1970 civil war against the PLO in Jordan, kept saying that Assad and the Syrian Army should be given free reign to go into Lebanon and "clean up" the mess. Hussein broadly hinted that the Syrians would not shrink at killing the terrorists.

Hussein's public expressions of support for the PLO and his formal acceptance of the 1974 Rabat summit conference recognizing the PLO as the "sole representative" of the Palestinian people were never really very convincing. It was known that deep down Hussein still wanted to resume his role as negotiator on the future of the West Bank, and that he would quickly do so if only given the chance. But that meant either weakening or removing the PLO.

Hussein urged the Americans to let Syria go into Lebanon. This would be a step in the desired direction of defeating the PLO, Hussein argued, supported by his time on the telephone between President Anwar Sadat said last night that top military commanders from Egypt and Saudi Arabia will soon meet to outline an overall Arab strategy. The new plan would transform the Arab nation into the world's sixth military power — "a position which it now holds now politically," he said. Other Arab states would be incorporated into this strategy within the next few months, he added.

Sadat was speaking at a joint session of parliament and the Central Committee of Egypt's political party — the Arab Socialist Union — on the occasion of the 24th anniversary of the July 23, 1952, revolution which toppled the monarchy in Egypt.

The Egyptian leader said that he, together with Saudi Arabia's King Khalid and Sudan's President Ja'afar Numeiry, had already laid the groundwork for a combined Arab strategy which would eventually be aimed at "liberating every inch of Arab land."

He said that Egypt's main goal remains the recovery of Arab territories held by Israel. Neither maneuvers "nor accords," (presumably including the Sinai interim agreement) would prevent Egypt from waging "a sacred liberation war," he said.

Sadat called on the Arabs in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip to "carry on with their struggle and resistance" against Israel and urged them to unite behind the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO).

"We shall not keep silent over our rights and the liberation of our lands," Sadat said.

In the first indication he has given of erosion in his political dealings with Washington, Sadat said he would take note of the U.S. slowness in the region. He said Egypt welcomed the change in U.S. policy in the Middle East, "but we noticed certain complications."

Sadat urged the Soviet Union "to translate" its pledges of support to the Arabs into material aid. He said that once the Kremlin mended its rift with Egypt and stopped supporting rival Arab camps, Cairo would move to rebuild its bridges with Moscow.

Sadat made special mention of the improved relations his country had recently made with Peking, as well as of the developing ties with France. He also praised West Germany's "constructive" ties with Cairo.

In his three-hour speech, Sadat lashed out violently at Libya's "madman" Mu'ammer Gaddafi, warning that Egypt would no longer tolerate his involvement in inter-Arab dissensions and the way he is used by foreign power to spread

Shots halt mercy bid

BEIRUT. — The Red Cross abandoned efforts yesterday to reach an estimated 1,000 wounded persons in the besieged Tel el-Zaatar refugee camp because of heavy gunfire.

A convoy of Red Cross ambulances drove toward the camp shortly after dawn when the partial truce appeared to be taking hold. However, a scout car which had driven ahead radioed back:

"All hell is breaking loose." The ambulances then turned back.

Red cross spokesman Jean Hoerliger said further attempts were being called off until a "real cease-fire" takes hold.

"We are sick of playing games. We cannot deal anymore with half-day cease-fires. Either the warring parties recognize this or the whole thing is off," he said.

An estimated 1,000 wounded are isolated in the camp without medicine. Up to 100 of the wounded are seriously injured and dying for lack of medical attention, according to Palestinian sources.

For the second successive day, Christian gunmen opened fire on units of the Arab League peace-keeping force in the "green line" area separating Moslem and Christian sectors in Beirut.

Nine Saudi soldiers — members of the force — were wounded. (UPI)

Relief supplies flown to Lebanon

The aircraft, which arrived via normal civilian air routes from Cyprus, was parked at the end of the runway. Its cargo was brought to it in trucks bearing West Bank number plates, and it was loaded by airport staff.

Airport authorities waived the usual landing and cargo fees. This was the third flight of relief supplies donated by West Bank residents to the Lebanese. (Itim)

Uganda mutiny spreading, Kenyan newspaper says

NAIROBI. — A reported mutiny in the Uganda army spread to a third battalion yesterday, and now involves more than a quarter of Idi Amin's 12,000-strong army, Kenyan news reports said yesterday.

"The Daily Nation" reported that the rebel soldiers are vowing to fight to the death unless drastic remedial measures are instituted to bring about an orderly government in Uganda.

So far there has been no confirmation of the "Nation's" reports of the Uganda military rebellion.

Among demands being made by the rebels are the formation of a new consultative body to advise a freshly elected ruling defence council, country-wide reconstruction with the help of international bodies and restoration of military discipline with reorganization of the armed forces, the "Nation" reported.

Uganda radio itself reported six persons, including four "ranking" officials had been arrested on charges of subversion.

The Kampala government yesterday ordered a cut-off of petrol supplies to private motorists until further notice "due to the acute shortage of fuel." Uganda has accused Kenya of halting the transit of fuel supplies. (Reuters, UPI)

Nippy weather on Mars

PASADENA, California. — The first Martian weather report showed nippy morning temperatures of 122 degrees below zero Fahrenheit on the red planet, under pink skies.

Dust particles floating in the thin atmosphere scatter sunlight to paint the sky pink, scientists explained yesterday, even though it looked an earthly blue in Viking 1's first colour picture.

"It is red, but not as red as the surface," said Dr. Carl Sagan.

The false colour in the first picture was due to incorrect adjustment of Viking's cameras, said project officials.

A more serious problem was also revealed late Wednesday. The seis-monometer designed to detect "Marsquakes" didn't turn on properly after Tuesday's landing. Unless it can be fixed by radio commands from earth, the instrument won't be able to carry out its work of recording quakes and probing the interior of the planet, said deputy mission director Lou Klingsland.

Scientists had hoped to have the use of seismometers aboard both Viking 1 and its twin, Viking 2 — due for a landing later this summer — in order to determine the location of any Marsquakes. If only one seismometer works properly, only the number, not the direction of the quakes can be registered. (AP)

Israel agents 'help Egypt and Saudia'

LONDON. — Israel's secret service has recently been supplying information to Egypt and Saudi Arabia, according to a long study of Middle East intelligence organizations in today's "Daily Telegraph" magazine.

The author, E.H. Cookridge, says that Israeli sources learnt of Libya's plan to build a wall of fortifications in a disputed oil-rich area on the frontier with Egypt, and passed on the information to the American Central Intelligence Agency, which duly reported it to President Sadat. The fortifications were to be built by Bulgaria.

Israeli information about subversion in Saudi Arabia has frequently been passed to King Khalid, Crown Prince Fahd or to Kamal Adham, their intelligence chief, through the former CIA operatives who run the kingdom's secret service, on which $330m. had been spent by the end of last year.

Cookridge, a leading writer on espionage, also claims that it was Israeli agents, on the look-out for Palestinian terrorists, who first heard by chance of Libyan involvement with the Irish Republican Army. This led to the capture of an illegal arms ship off the coast of the Irish Republic.

The only Arab country which has neither CIA nor Soviet KGB connections, writes Cookridge, is Iraq, which is relying on Chinese advisers and arms. Recently it has been enrolling Albanian security instructors.

Comparing the various Middle East intelligence organizations, Cookridge calls Israel's "the most elaborate and efficient in the area." Egypt's is named second best, although it has not recovered from being trained at different times by the British, the CIA, ex-Nazis and the KGB.

The present boss of all Egypt's secret departments is named as Vice-President Hosny Mubarak, a 46-year-old former Air Force general, although Premier Mamoudh Saleh, a former Interior Minister, remains in charge of security measures, such as the recent mass arrests of Communists following Egypt's estrangement with Moscow.

IRA men held in killing

DUBLIN. — Special branch agents have arrested 13 suspected Irish Republican Army men in connection with the assassination of British Ambassador Christopher Ewart-Biggs and a secretary, police said yesterday.

The men were held overnight at Bridewell Prison in Dublin where they were interrogated by detectives. Official sources reported most were expected to be charged in connection with Wednesday's assassination.

Several thousand Irish troops and police combed the country for the men who set off a landmine under Ewart-Biggs' car. Police manned roadblocks on Dublin's outskirts 24 hours after the killings.

Several of the suspects were rounded up during the night by armed detectives in a string of raids on the homes of known IRA sympathizers, police said.

A police spokesman said they are hunting for three men seen running from the ambush scene. It wasn't known if any of these men were among the 13 arrested.

Across the border in Londonderry, Northern Ireland, an army checkpoint picked up Rory O'Brady, president of the provisional Sinn Fein, the IRA's political wing, and Sean Keenan, a provisional IRA battalion commander.

Police said the army handed the pair over to them and the men were being questioned. There was no indication whether this was in connection with the assassination of Ewart-Biggs.

There was official suspicion that the terrorists who blew up the ambassador's limousine killed the wrong man. (AP)

'Amin lied in claim of good-will gesture'

LONDON. — Uganda's president Amin yesterday was accused of lying in his claim that Mrs. Dora Bloch had been taken to a hospital in Kampala in his personal car as a gesture of goodwill. Binyamin Bloch, one of the missing black hostages, said that she had walked from the Entebbe air terminal to an ambulance when she needed treatment for food stuck in her throat.

Bloch, who is in London to ask British officials and politicians to continue the search for his mother's body, said Britain should not sever diplomatic relations with Uganda because that would endanger the lives of British nationals there. Instead, he said, Britain should apply joint pressure together with Commonwealth countries and African states against Amin.

"I have nothing against the Ugandan people. At least one Ugandan was shot dead while trying to help my mother," Bloch said. Stressing that mourning for his mother could not begin until her body was buried — or every possible attempt to trace it had been made — Bloch referred to unconfirmed reports that the body of an elderly white woman, her face smeared with blood, had been found in a sugar plantation outside Kampala, and had later been taken away for burial.

Bloch, who is a 42-year-old consulting engineer in Herzliya, was accompanied by his wife Wednesday night when he left 25 British MPs who agreed to press the Foreign Office to make further inquiries about his mother.

Meanwhile, in Paris, an Air France spokesman said that Mrs. Bloch was not on the list of released hijack hostages flown to Paris from Uganda on June 30. The spokesman was commenting on a statement by Amin that she was among 47 passengers released four days before the Israeli rescue operation. (JTA, Reuters)

Top-to-bottom shakeup in staff of 'Kolbotek'

By AARON SITTEK
Jerusalem Post Reporter

A top-to-bottom shakeup in the staff of "Kolbotek" is expected before the popular Thursday night television show returns in about four weeks.

Devoted entirely to consumer protection themes, "Kolbotek" was suspended, effective last night, after Broadcasting Authority officials earned of irregularities in the preparation of the July 1 programme dealing with carpeting.

Producer Hanina Amotz acknowledged that staff members had accepted money from a carpet manufacturer to buy his competitor's product which was "shown" to be inferior because of loose pile. Amotz was transferred to other duties. The election of a new producer has begun.

Now it has been learned that not only Amotz — but almost all other personnel connected with "Kolbotek" — will be replaced. It was not clear yesterday whether moderator Danny Pe'er will be among them. Meanwhile, the works committee representing TV journalists and production workers met yesterday to discuss "Kolbotek" and heard a report on the action from a management representative.

A committee member told The Jerusalem Post afterward that the general manager's decision to suspend the show, since a question of professional ethics had been involved. However, a few members thought that termination of the employment contract of three "Kolbotek" staffers was too harsh. The tenured workers have not been dismissed.

When the show resumes, its structure will probably be different. One idea broached to Broadcasting Authority director-general Yitzhak Livni is that issues as well as merchandise and prices be treated on "Kolbotek" regularly. Among such issues would be environment protection, educational policy and emigration.

Last night, the "Behind the Headlines" show replaced "Kolbotek" following the 9 p.m. "Mabat" news programme.

Anonymous firm in $5m. offer to buy MFC fleet

NEW YORK. — Sea Containers Inc., New York based shipping company, and an anonymous partner on Wednesday joined the growing list of business enterprises negotiating to buy the beleaguered fleet of the maritime fruit carriers company.

Israel-based MFC and its would-be buyers are racing to salvage what is left of the fleet from the banks earlier this month began seizing and selling the ships whose mortgages they own.

Sea Containers and what it called "Company X" offered to set up a partnership with MFC's separate business operation in Bermuda to own and lease the fleet. In return for $5m. from Sea Containers and a "adequate" investment from "Company X," the two would acquire control of the Bermuda firm and MFC's fleet.

Sea Containers President James B. Herwood said the proposal hinges on the willingness of MFC's creditors to restructure the payments of its $300m. in debts. More than $200m. of loans and mortgages on 23 refrigerated container ships is owned by international banks, including Bankers Trust Company and Marine Midland Bank of New York.

MFC's web of international business arrangements, so complicated that the banks have difficulty tracking them, began to unravel about a month ago. Depressed ship charter rates and trouble meeting the huge interest payments on its borrowed money made the company appear perilously close to failure. Creditors said.

Scrambling to recover some of their loans, the banks went after the fleet of refrigerated container ships, the major tangible assets of the corporation. More than half the ships were legally arrested. Marine Midland already has sold two ships to British firms. (AP)

Dayan: Peres consulted with me on Entebbe

SYDNEY. — Former Defence Minister Moshe Dayan, M.K., disclosed here yesterday that Defence Minister Shimon Peres consulted him about the Entebbe rescue operation 49 hours before it was mounted.

Dayan, who arrived here Wednesday to begin a 10-day Australian lecture tour, said that "on Thursday — two days before the operation — we had a guest from Australia for dinner. Whilst we were there Peres rang me up and said he must consult me very urgently. I told him I was busy."

"He said, 'I will come to the restaurant, I must see you.' So he came over and apologized and then we went away for a while and he told me about it and asked me what I thought."

"I told him I thought it was a first-class plan with no fault in it and could be carried out."

"I was very happy at the outcome," Dayan added. "Dayan dismissed attempts by Arab and African nations at the UN to condemn the Israeli action and declared: 'I can't see how anybody can question our right to rescue our people who have been taken as hostages by hijacking which nobody does and which we can do anything about it.' Yussuf Hanna, veteran Jordan journalist, at 87

Jordan's veteran journalist, Yussuf Hanna, once a correspondent of this newspaper when it was The Palestine Post, died in Amman yesterday at the age of 87.

The Egyptian-born newspaperman was known as a leading "Palestinian" journalist, having come to this country from Cairo in 1917 as an interpreter on General Allenby's staff. He soon became the editor of the Jaffa "Falastin" newspaper and later of "al-Jihad" and "a-Difa" in the Old City of Jerusalem. He moved to Amman in 1970.

Hanna reported for this paper in the late 1930s and early 1940s. When this fact was revealed by The Jerusalem Post in a special 25th anniversary issue in 1968, it led to his temporary suspension from "al-Jihad." Later, however, he returned — mainly as a political commentator and literary critic. His works include the translation of Chaim Weizman's "Trial and Error," and the serialization of many other books on Israel and Zionism.

IL 20,000 paid 'legally' to sell pork 'illegally'

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — "The only protection money I pay," says Pinhas X, a "Carniel Market" butcher, who deals in non-kosher meat, "is legal protection money — about IL20,000 a year to the city — in fines and inspection fees." He adds that none of the inspections are carried out.

Pinhas — this is not his real name — explains that according to Tel Aviv by-law, the selling of pork is illegal. Nevertheless, many stores carry on a thriving business although they pay "legal protection" for the right, he says. According to Pinhas, a city inspector comes into his shop once a week and writes a report, much like a traffic report. As he receives the report, Pinhas hands the inspector a small package of pork fat — "evidence" that he deals in pork. The evidence is needed in case he should contest the city's monthly trial held at the Municipal Court, he explains.

Pinhas has never claimed he is innocent. Each month he admits his guilt, pays IL400 — IL100 per weekly report — and returns to his shop.

Pinhas' protection problems don't end there. Before a pork carcass reaches him, he pays the city IL6 — it was upped last week from IL3 — for what is called a "second control fee." This dates back to the Mandate. At that time, authorities checked pork twice — once when slaughtered and again when brought to a distribution point to see that it had not spoiled. Cold storage facilities were undeveloped and pork could easily deteriorate. Today, the slaughtered pork is brought in from Galicia to a municipal inspection station near the "L" plan area (Tzichon Lomel).

Pinhas says that after he pays IL6, inspectors give their seal of approval — although no inspection of the meat has been made — and then the meat is delivered to his "illegal" shop.

He handles about 10 carcasses a day. At IL6 a carcass is a fee for an inspection which is only mandatory for pigs and not beef — Pinhas ends up by paying the city about IL15,000 a year.

Pinhas says that city officials know about the problem and are sympathetic. But if any changes are made in the status quo, it was explained, then the religious faction would bolt the Coalition — which would then collapse.

Yadin: I'd destroy present vote system from within

TEL AVIV. — Professor Yigal Yadin said on Wednesday night that if he decides to run for the Knesset, he would use the existing electoral system to destroy that system.

The Hebrew University archaeologist and former Chief of Staff who was speaking to Wizo women here, also termed "unfortunate" Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's recent charge that he is "a menace to democracy."

Yadin, who is known for his opposition to the present party-list method of electing Knesset members, said he would agree to serve in a new Government only if it agreed to change the electoral system. It would also have to hold new elections within six months.

Asked who would run with him on his independent Knesset list, he said he would reveal that when he decides whether to run.

Referring to another of Prime Minister Rabin's charges against him — that he was a "false prophet" — Yadin said that in the Bible this title was given to those who said everything was all right and who papered-over problems.

Describing some of Israel's problems, Yadin said one of the worst was its bureaucracy, which he called the most "developed" in the world. The country, he said, had three governments — the Histadrut, the Cabinet and the Jewish Agency.

The central problem for the future, he said, was to revive the central aim of Zionism — to return the Jews to their country and turn them into a healthy people. He was against drawing maps of the country's future boundaries, but Israel must make sure that it will be a democratic and Jewish state, not one ruling over an Arab majority. (Ithm)

Huge increase in counterfeit bills

By ARTHUR KEMELMAN

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Thousands of counterfeit notes have turned up in Israel over the past half year.

This was pointed out yesterday by Rav-Pakad Varda Tamir of the criminal identification laboratory at National Police Headquarters, who was addressing a group of bank tellers who deal in foreign currency, at a Bankers' Association-sponsored lecture.

Tamir compared the "enormous" rise in counterfeit bills in the country this year, with the 500-600 notes run across in 1970. But she did not say what was the "nominal" total value "of the counterfeiters."

One of the chief reasons for this increase was the technological advances over the past few years in reproducing and duplicating printed material. The old-time forger was an artist, today's counterfeiters only have to know how to photograph, she said.

American currency — 100, 50 and 20-dollar denominations primarily — are among the bills circulating in Israel. The source of this "funny money" has not yet been uncovered by the police.

Aside from the "economic" benefits to be gained from counterfeiting American bills, Rav-Pakad Tamir said, they can also be more easily forged than banknotes of most other countries.

KNESSET BRIEFS

MICHA HARISH and Adi Amoral (Alignment) said in similar motions for the agenda this week that more builders in this country infringe the planning laws, than obey them. Interior Minister Yosef Burg agreed that the laws must be applied more strictly, and their motions were voted to Committee.

BEUDIN MK Shlomo Hamad Abu Rabbia (Alignment-affiliated) charged in the Knesset lobbies that the Economic Committee had turned a deaf ear to the just claims of the Negev Beduin when it approved the Government's recommendations to appropriate half of their lands, pay compensation for 30 per cent. and let them keep only 20 per cent. Abu Rabbia said the Committee refused to let the Beduin plead their case fully.

Severe curbs on engineer sought in US

TEL AVIV. — The former assistant city engineer of Gary, Indiana, who is wanted by U.S. police on charges of extortion, has been instructed by a District Court judge here to report every day to the police until an application for his extradition has been considered.

Dov Cohen, who was born in Netanyahu in 1920, was released on IL500,000 bail by a Jerusalem magistrate who heard an application to remand him in custody until the end of the extradition proceedings. Cohen appealed to the District Court on the grounds that such high bail was tantamount to imprisonment.

Tel Aviv District Court Judge Yosef Harish reduced the bail to IL120,000, and ordered Cohen to report daily to a police station until the extradition hearing is over. Both his passports were ordered to be surrendered to the police.

Cohen was charged by a Hammond, Indiana, grand jury last March with extorting $47,320 from building contractors in 1971 and 1972, when he held the post of Gary's assistant city engineer.

He returned to Israel early in 1975, after resigning his Gary post three years previously and moving to Florida, where he bought two large apartment buildings. (Ithm)

Top British cricketer to coach here

By JACK LEON

Jerusalem Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Basil d'Oliveira, one of England's outstanding post-war cricketers, is due in Israel early in October to conduct country-wide coaching courses and play with London's touring Harrow Cricket Club against local sides.

Cape Town-born d'Oliveira, 45, a free-scoring batsman and effective medium-pace or off-break bowler, joined Worcestershire in 1964 after a spell in the Lancashire league. Two years later he won the first of his nearly 50 Test caps for England.

The popular coloured player, who is also an experienced coach, has eight times scored more than 1,000 runs in a season, with a career best of 227 against Yorkshire in 1974. While with Worcestershire, his skill as an all-rounder was a major factor in the club twice winning the county championship and achieving numerous successes in the one-day game. In 1969, he was awarded the OBE for his services to cricket.

D'Oliveira's two-week coaching assignment has been approved by the International Cricket Conference (ICC) which in 1974 sponsored Israel's successful application for associate membership.

D'Oliveira will be the second world-class cricketer to play in Israel, following England's Ken Barrington, who was here in 1968 as a member of the Bournemouth 5705 club.

His intensive coaching programme will include preparing Israel's national team for the two-day match against Harrow on October 29 and 30, local Cricket Association heads Ivan Kantor and Ralph Hadani told The Jerusalem Post yesterday. The London club was first here in 1973, and is the only non-Jewish side among the dozen overseas cricket teams to have visited Israel. In all, Harrow will play five games during its fortnight's stay as guest of the association.

Maccabi fund prescriptions

TEL AVIV. — Members of the Maccabi sick fund will no longer have to pay for medicines at private drug stores under an agreement reached yesterday between the sick fund and the pharmacists. The situation reverts to what it was before July 1, when members could pick up medicines at drug stores and the stores would bill the sick fund at the end of each month.

A system by which members paid for their prescriptions and then applied for reimbursement from Maccabi had been instituted this month to expedite income tax and administrative matters, but was found less desirable than the original plan.

A CONTRACTOR from Jerusalem, Ezra Alafi, was fined IL45,000 by the District Court on Wednesday for failing to pay tax money he withheld from his employees to the Treasury for more than six years.

Athletics take over spotlight today

MONTREAL. — Athletics climbs onto the Olympic stage today as the belated showpiece of the Montreal Games.

The Olympics will be nearly a week old when the first runners go to their starting blocks, but the rest of the games look certain to be dominated by the glamorous stars of track and field.

The dazzling performances already recorded this season suggest that in many events the Montreal athletics could reach a level of achievement never seen before. But the men's programme will be flawed and the worth of several gold medals will be questionable.

The African boycott, the biggest mass walkout that sport has known, will hit hardest in the men's track events, in which African runners have become a valued part of the Olympic scene.

Valery Borzov scored a notable double in Munich.

For four years the Americans have insisted Borzov would not have won the 100 metres title had not favourites Eddie Hart and Ray Robinson been prevented from running in the final because of a timetable mix-up. Now Borzov is back, and in American teen-ager Harvey Glance he faces possibly the toughest challenger of his career.

Apart from Borzov, the outstanding Soviet men will be triple jumper Viktor Saneyev and shot-putter Alexander Baryshnikov.

Saneyev, who has a deserved reputation as one of the most competitive performers in the world, is seeking to become the only triple jumper ever to win three successive Olympic titles. Among his rivals will be world record-holder Josea Oliveira.

Until this month, Baryshnikov's main claim to fame was his unorthodox spiral technique and his inconsistency, particularly in competitions outside the Soviet Union. But 12 days ago he took part in what had been expected to be a routine warm-up meeting in Paris and hurled the shot to a world record, shattering 22 metres.

The outstanding figure among the U.S. men is marathon champion Frank Shorter, who will start favourite for a second successive gold medal.

Because of the African boycott, Shorter can reckon without the traditionally tough marathon challenge from the Ethiopians though he could face an unexpected rival in Finland's Lasse Viren.

Viren will be defending his 5,000 and 10,000 metres titles and is seriously thinking about using the games to make his marathon debut. Victory in all three events would establish the flying Finn as the greatest distance runner of all time, though it is a formidable task which might be beyond even his enormous dedication.

The women's programme will almost certainly provide another success saga for East Germany, though this time they must grapple with the recent resurgence of the Russian women in the middle distance events as well as the brilliance of Polish sprint star Irena Siewinska.

Like Borzov, East German Renate Stecher won a rare sprint double in Munich and recent world records by West German pair Inge Helten and Annegret Richter will bring added spice to the 100 metres. (Reuters)

Israel rally holds Mexico in match of lost tempers

MONTREAL. — Three players were ordered off the field when Israel and Mexico drew their Group B Olympic soccer game 2-2 on Wednesday before more than 25,000 spectators.

It was a game of lost tempers.

Victor Rangel put Mexico ahead in the 12th minute when Gideon Damti misjudged a pass in his own penalty area.

Israel attacked determinedly, but just before half-time, the Mexicans made it 2-0. Some swift passing exposed slowness on the Israeli left flank, and again Rangel turned a half-chance into a goal. These were the only tallies of the first half.

Within 10 minutes of the restart, Israel was level. Yaaron Oz drove a fierce shot home after a Damti effort had been blocked. Four minutes later, Bardoni Viveros floored Damti as he bore down on goal, and Itzhak Shum shot home the equaliser from the penalty spot.

It was the end of the scoring, and the beginning of the oddities. A dazzling run by Oz led to Itzhak Peretz putting the ball in the net, but the referee ruled him offside.

Tempers flared and Abraham Lev and Jorge Lopez Malo were sent off for fighting, with 22 minutes to go.

In the dying seconds of the game, Israel's Oz, one of the stars of the game, was banished, apparently for aiming a kick at an opponent.

France's soccer amateurs scored their second 4-1 victory in three days on Wednesday to put themselves at the head of the Group B Olympic soccer with the best points total of any of the 13 competing countries.

Michel Platini scored two goals against Guatemala in a game of relentless French pressure. He opened the scoring early in the first half, and then Louis Amisse made it 2-0. In the second half, Platini scored again and Jean Marc Schaefer made it four.

Guatemala's lone tally came late in the game.

France leads Group B with a maximum four points against two for Israel and one each for Guatemala and Mexico.

On Monday France beat Mexico 4-1, and Friday plays the last of the preliminaries — against Israel, which on Wednesday drew 2-2 with Mexico.

Int'l sports body ousts S. Africa

MONTREAL. — South Africa was expelled yesterday from the International Amateur Athletic Federation (IAAF) for practising racial discrimination in athletics.

Delegates at the IAAF congress voted by 297 to 145 in favour of the resolution which had been presented by the Soviet Union, Senegal and Sudan.

The decision means that South Africa will be unable to take part in athletics events of any sort against foreign rivals. For the past six years they have been subject to a partial ban which limited them to overseas tours by individual competitors.

After the vote was announced, Professor Hannes Botha, President of the South African Amateur Athletic Union (SAAAU), said: "This will be a setback for our boys and girls at home. We shall have to find other incentives for them. Even now, when we've been unable to take part at match level, we had 30 athletes who reached the Montreal Olympic qualifying standards. But without any outside contact it will be even more difficult in future."

Nadia crowned queen

The new queen of the Montreal Olympics was crowned in Montreal on Wednesday night. Amid incredible scenes at the Gymnastics forum, Nadia Comaneci, the 14-year-old Rumanian superstar, dethroned Russia's Ludmila Turisheva and Olga Korbut, the darlings of the 1972 Munich Games, and won the gold medal for all-round individual exercises.

Miss Korbut, who won two individual gold medals in Munich, limped out of the arena before the end of the contest. She looked graced as the 13,000 capacity crowd roared their approval for the Rumanian successor.

Nadia drew tremendous cheers from the crowd by scoring two perfect "tens" in the contest, on the asymmetric bars and on the beam.

This brought the number of flawless performances she has made in these Olympics to five. No one has ever scored even one maximum before.

The Rumanian girl, who started gymnastics in kindergarten — "There was a trial and I was picked out" — had already produced the perfect score of 10 on 15 occasions before coming to the Montreal Games.

Before yesterday's competition got under way, fans were queuing and begging for tickets.

In the first round, Miss Comaneci faced one of her worst exercises, the horse vault, but she clearly had the crowd behind her. She scored 9.85 on her two attempts, while on the asymmetric bars, Miss Korbut earned 9.90. Miss Turisheva, who took the bronze, also made a terrific start on the horse, scoring 9.90 and 9.85.

Nelly Kim, the silver winner, scored 9.70 on the beam. But it was in the second round that the crowd realized that here was history in the making. Miss Comaneci was performing on the asymmetric bars, probably her strongest exercise. She produced her first perfect score and the fans went wild.

Nikolai Andrianov of the Soviet Union won the gold medal in the men's individual all-round gymnastics. The defending champion, Sawao Kato of Japan, won the silver and another Japanese, Mitsuo Tsukahara, took the bronze. (Reuters)

Basketball

Russian and American basketball men's teams were assured of being in the fight for Olympic medals yesterday after demolishing previously undefeated Yugoslavia and Canada in key matches.

The victories make it likely they will take the court later for a renewal of their 1972 Olympic battle in Munich, won by Russia in the closing seconds by 51-50.

The Soviets easily defeated Canada, 108-85, ending the host country's "Cinderella dream" of coming from nowhere to be an Olympic powerhouse.

But the U.S. had a scare. Yugoslavia was in command at half-time, 55-51, before succumbing in the second half to U.S. speed and aggressive play. The American quit won by 112-93.

Yugoslavia, however, along with Italy, remains in contention for Class B medal play, like Canada and Cuba in Class A.

In other games, Italy took the measure of Czechoslovakia, 79-69; Cuba trounced Japan, 97-56; Australia edged Mexico, 120-117 in overtime, and Puerto Rico registered a 2-0 forfeit win over Egypt, which has withdrawn from the games.

In the women's hoop competition, the Russians, undefeated in two contests, are the clear favourites to win the gold medal. This is the first time women's basketball has been added to the Olympic Games.

But the fight is keen for the silver and bronze medals, with Japan, also without a loss in two tries, Bulgaria and the U.S. considered in the running for second and third place honours.

Soviets pull out of water polo

MONTREAL. — The Soviet Union, the defending Olympic champion, announced yesterday it was pulling out of the water polo competition because of "injuries and sickness" involving members of the team, and the president of the sport's governing body said the action was "unsportsmanlike" and recommended disciplinary measures.

The Russians, upset earlier in the week by Holland, forfeited their match scheduled for yesterday against Cuba.

sports governing body, said he was approached on Wednesday by a Soviet representative inquiring "about the feasibility of its team withdrawing from competition in as much as they would not be able to finish in the top six teams."

A statement from FINA said, "Dr. Henning's observations at that time indicated that such extreme action was most unsportsmanlike, and more so in view of the fact that the USSR would be hosting the Olympic Games in 1980."

Henning is the only American serving as president of a major international sports federation. (AP)

Hannelore Anke of East Germany yesterday broke the world record in heats for the women's 100 metres breaststroke in the Olympic pool, and an American 400-metre medley relay unit, filled with three second-stringers, shattered another world record, the 10th one the powerful U.S. mermen have wiped out in five days of Olympics competition.

An American foursome of Peter Rocca, 18, Chris Woo, Jack Babashoff and Joe Bottom, posted a 3:47.28 to easily pass the qualifying.

The performance erased the world standard of 3:48.14 that the U.S. had set in the 1972 Olympic Games, which also stood as the Olympic record until yesterday.

Only Bottom was expected to compete in last night's finals, as the butterfly specialist, John Naber will replace Rocca in the opening backstroke leg, John Hencken goes in for Woo in the second leg, the breaststroke, and John Montgomery will take over for Babashoff.

Earlier, Brian Goodell, a double world record holder, broke the Olympic 400-metre freestyle record, pacing the qualifying in 3:55.34.

Third fastest behind Goodell and Shaw was Vladimir Raskatov, 19, of the Soviet Union, who clocked 3:57.56 shaving 00.54 seconds from the European record he set last month.

Australia's Stephen Holland, who took the bronze medal in Tuesday night's 1,500 metres final, was fourth best qualifier in 3:58.39, nearly two seconds outside his Commonwealth record.

The fifth swimmer to break the four-minute mark was 17-year-old Jan Madruga from Brazil, who finished fourth in the 1,500 final.

Miss Anke, the 18-year-old world champion, clocked one minute, 11.11 seconds to cut 00.82 seconds from the world mark set by 14-year-old teammate, Carola Nitschke in East Berlin last month. Carola also qualified yesterday with the second fastest time, 1:11.93.

East Germany's miracle mermaids, after winning the first five races, were rudely jolted on Wednesday night by the Soviet Union in the 200-metre breaststroke when the Russians, led by 16-year-old Marina Kosheva, swept the field. Miss Kosheva won the event in a world record time of 2:33.35.

For the U.S. men's swimming team, the highlight was their victory in the 4x200-metre freestyle relay in world record time. Mike Bruner, Bruce Furniss, John Naber and Jim Montgomery combined for a time of 7:30.33 they set in the qualifying heats.

Soviet swimmers also set a furious pace to finish second to the American quartet. The Russian relay team also bettered the previous world mark. Britain placed third.

East Germany's flying fraulein nevertheless added to their gold pile. Ulrike Richter, 17, won the 100-metre backstroke final in 1:01.22 although short of her own world mark of 1:01.51.

The other gold for the American men was chalked up by Matt Vogel's victory in the 100-metre butterfly. Joe Bottom and Gary Hall completed a U.S. sweep by finishing second and third. The U.S. has won all seven swimming races contested so far.

The butterfly race was the only one among the seven decided so far in which the world record did not fall.

IF MY YIDDISH is correct (which it probably isn't), a "kargman" is a mean fellow and I sometimes wonder whether Israel Kargman, MK, chairman of the Knesset Finance Committee and enemy of late night television, was influenced in his attitudes by his name. He is against public spending, private transport and late viewing, the last on the ground that workers should go to bed early so as to be healthy, productive and wise. Now I wonder if Mr. Kargman obeyed his own self-denying ordinance this week, or did he join the rest of the nation in watching like grim death till the last gymnast had curvetted off the screen?

Assuming that he did put in his usual healthy eight hours and ignored the blandishments of Television House's programming, he must have been bewildered as he went on his constitutional the following morning, or clambered up into an early morning bus. For around him he must have seen bleary-eyed Israeli zombies, snatching forty winks as they moved along, wondering how they would get through the day till 4.30 p.m., when the show would begin again.

Television House certainly struck a K.O. right uppercut at Kargmanism, even more effective than that used by the Puerto Rican boxer on his Italian opponent. I was reminded of my own discovery in the U.S.A. of the Late Show, the Late Late Show, and the Late Late Late Show, leading naturally to the Breakfast Show. When Cannon comes on at midnight, there's glory for you. I don't think TVH will ever be able to revert to more austere programming after spoiling us like this.

Mingled with the Olympics, we got not only Cannon, but also Kojak, some tortured American Zionist souls, Jason King, Julie Andrews—goodies for the whole family, provided they had fortified themselves with siestas.

OF THE OLYMPICS themselves, some things will stick long in the mind. There was the incredible and rather astute tolerance of British fencer, Jim Fox, interviewed about his opponent, that Soviet crook, Boris Nischenko, who had built an ultra-sophisticated device on his epee to register a hit where there was none. Fox's attitude was that the Soviets insist on such excellent results that the poor boy must have yielded to irresistible temptation. The impulse to do something must have lasted a long time if it sustained him through working out that complicated device.

TELEREVIEW / Philip Gillon

But what superlatives can we find for Nadia Comaneci, scoring all those tens in the gymnastics? I wish somebody had explained to ignorant me why she was getting tens while lesser girls, who seemed to me to perform wonders with their bodies just like Nadia did, were fobbed off with contemptuous 9.85s and 9.75s. Where did they go wrong?

I once got hell from many readers for saying that after a time, gymnastics tends to pall on the uninitiated. I certainly didn't find these girls dull; they are great. I noticed that the ideal gymnast seems to have tiny breasts but a jutting-out backside like a very attractive Hottentot; perhaps an expert will explain to us why such a figure is suitable for all those somersaults and other intricate physical convolutions.

Generally, women seemed to dominate the screen most of the time. This is not the petulant complaints of a male chauvinist, but the obedience of a worshipper. Kornelia

Ender deserves our idolatry: I liked her, too, for not being poker-faced, but almost as emotional as a mare. John Naber, who shared with us his joy when he broke the world backstroke record. I have always detested poker-faced sportsmen, who treat triumph and disaster, just the same. Give me, rather, the man who exults in victory and breaks anything that comes to hand when he loses due to some foul quirk of fate or a crooked umpire. This goes for women too.

WHY PROF. YUVAL chose to intersperse the Olympics, with the problems of American Jews in relation to Israel, I cannot explain. Nor, for that matter could he; he merely said that the problem went on and on, and on, despite the Olympics. So why couldn't we have waited a few weeks for it?

Anyway, we had it, and it wasn't a bad hour of talk, to rest us for the coming strains of world-record-breaking. The dialogue got off to a weird start, with the Israelis talking about yerida and yordim, and the Americans looking at them as if they were crazy. Yridda is obviously an Israeli question, not an American one: just because it is a fashionable issue here is no reason to raise it.

As soon as the debate settled down, it became very interesting, with the Israeli largely spectators, as Professor Urbach pointed out in some amusing comments. Dr. Arthur Hertzberg made the very good point that the thing that brings American Jews closest to Israel is the campaign for funds: during the campaigns, they hear top-level politicians, generals and academics talking about Israel. Identification with Israel through the funds was more important than going to synagogue once a year, he thought.

He is quite right: I have always believed that contributing money and work for a cause has a high spiritual content. If the cause is Zion, every cent or penny paid is a tie binding the donor to the Jewish State.

Hertzberg was on weaker ground when he pleaded for the right to understand Israeli policy, so that he will know what he is talking about when he interviews senators on Israel's behalf. He doesn't want to dictate policy, he only wants to understand it.

The confounded impertinence of the man! If he identified so profoundly with Israel, why shouldn't he be as completely concerned about what our policy is as we are?

DANCE / Joan Cass

High-stepping good-time Charlies

DONALD MCKAYLE, who choreographed "Album Leaves," premiered by the Dance Theatre Company at the Jerusalem Theatre this week, once wrote: "People come to the theatre to be moved or entertained. They do not come to be lectured, perplexed by perversity, or bored by tedious obscurities, no matter how sincerely felt." Every dancer should paste up this comment over his daily practice barre.

"Album Leaves" was a highly entertaining glimpse of manners and mores in America at an earlier period in this century. The scene was nostalgically set by Ya'acov Agor's blown-up slides of snapshots of a drunken flapper and two escorts, of a sentimental self-infatuated belle, of a beach athlete, of high-stepping good-time Charlies—that came to life one by one by the tunes by Ferdinand "Jelly Roll" Morton.

McKayle skilfully staged in each vignette not only a charming little dance, but he also managed to create character sketches and situations with unexpected clever by-play. Most appealing was Roger Briant as a muscle-strutting show-off in a striped bathing suit. While the whole cast gave a spirited performance, the Batsheva dancers unfortunately revealed once again that they lack an understanding and proper style for jazz dance. If they want to do justice to this important American expression, they must give it more serious attention.

Anna Sokolow's new work "Poem of Ecstasy" was moving at times in its ebullience and emotional lyricism danced by Rina Schenfeld and Derek Linton. This black-and-purple romantic duet did not succeed, however, in holding its own under the full weight of Scriabin's orchestral tone poem. I never expected to find Rina Schenfeld overshadowed, but in this case neither she nor Linton nor Sokolow's subtle phrases (in dim, flickering lights) made enough of an impression to sustain the long dance. The music seemed to say everything by itself, the dance serving as a thin accompaniment to its hushness.

The third premiere of the evening was "Until I Arose," contributed by Moshe Efrati. These "Reflections on Deborah the Prophetess" held evidence of Efrati's ability to construct passages of energetic movement and an occasional striking moment (the prophetess veiled as a bride in a net curtain). But except for one lovely duet near the end, presenting Jael and Sisera in quiet, quivering embraces, the composition was poorly built from sections laden with uninteresting, flailing motions. It started off with a row of females in tortured lament to equally tortured shrieking sounds (by Noam Sheriff) and left itself no place to go except to add movements until it was time to stop. There was nothing either moving or entertaining about this piece.

It might be a good idea for Batsheva's director to sit out front and watch each dance before its premiere performance. If he doesn't find it entertaining or moving, he could drop it from the programme and substitute instead one of the many fine dances already in the company's repertory.

In memoriam

Children's library corner

Jerusalem Post Reporter
A YEAR AGO TODAY (Tammuz 25) a terrorist explosion killed 13 people in Jerusalem's Zion Square. (A total of 15 died from the blast). The memory of two of the victims, Michael and Rebekah Ben-Yitzhak, is being perpetuated by gifts of books to Jerusalem institutions.

The young couple had gone shopping downtown that fateful day, leaving their two sons, Boaz and Hillel, then 10 weeks and two-years-old respectively—with their grandparents.

Michael Ben-Yitzhak had immigrated to Israel from Glasgow in 1967, a year after his future wife came from America. Michael, an Oxford graduate, worked as a translator and did literary research. Rebekah, daughter of Israel and Margaret Soffer, worked as an editor of the English-language publication, "Israel Journal of Medical Science."

In their memory a children's library corner has been contributed to a Baka's nursery school run by the National Religious Women's Organization by the organization's Adalia Group, the family and friends. The dedication took place last February.

A collection of reference books for the library in Beit Eliseva is also being given by the Sophie Udin Group of Pioneer Women and friends of the family. Dedication is planned for the autumn.

An international collection of illustrated children's books will be presented by the family and their friends to the library of the new Youth Building of the Israel Museum. It will be augmented annually.

The Rebekah and Michael Ben-Yitzhak Award will be presented under the auspices of the Israel Museum to the Israeli artist of the best illustrated children's book published in Israel, contributed by the family and their friends.

IT WOULD BE interesting, and to a certain extent topical, to draw up a list of the potential borders of the Land of Israel as they are laid down in the Bible. The various enumerations are far from identical.

According to Gen. 12.6, the northern border would appear to be Shechem; the Pentateuch ends with the promise to Moses that everything he sees from Mt. Pisgah will become the inheritance, and the Bible specifies:

"All the land of Gilead unto Dan, and all Naphtali, and the Land of Ephraim and Manasseh, and all the land of Judah unto the utmost sea, and the South and the plain of the valley of Jericho unto Zoar."

In the first chapter of Joshua an undefined description is given: "Every place that the sole of your feet shall tread upon," but it continues with what is potentially the most extensive area of all, "the

BIBLICAL BYWAYS
L. I. RabinovitzSecure
borders

Lebanon and the Euphrates."

None of these, however, can be taken as exact and clearly defined borders. Only in one place in the Bible, in Num. 34, which we read tomorrow, is such a description given. There, the future borders are delineated with all the exactitude of a professional cartographer. It proceeds methodically around the compass, beginning and ending with the southern border, naming various sites and settlements and topographical features to enable clear identification, and it concludes "This shall be your land, with the coasts thereof roundabout."

ALTHOUGH many of these places are no longer identifiable, there is no doubt but that in general, the area defined is more or less identical—with the sole exception of the whole of the Sinai Peninsula, with that which came under the control of Israel as a result of the Six Day War.

And well do I remember a lecture given shortly after that by Dr. Israel Eldad, biblical scholar and supporter of the extreme right who, in pointing out this interesting fact, commented:

"One should not by any means be surprised at that. Israel is in need of secure and defensible borders. Do you think the Almighty was a bad strategist, or did not have this desideratum in view, when he defined the future borders of the country?" □

More power to the central bank

THE LIST of candidates under consideration to succeed Moshe Sanbar as Governor of the Bank of Israel in October gives cause to wonder whether the reason for his refusal to request a second term has been taken to heart.

The problem that was revealed during Sanbar's five years in office is that the position of Governor needs buttressing. His main job, apart from administering the monetary system, is to tell the Finance Minister and the Cabinet where they are going wrong in economic matters.

In order to do that effectively, one of two alternatives must prevail. Either he should enjoy a certain immunity, like a judge — so that he can make himself unpopular with the politicians and get away with it — or else the post of Governor should be awarded to a person with sufficient standing in the hierarchy of power to make his voice heard, whether the politicians like it or not.

Mr. Sanbar is an accomplished civil servant and an expert economist; he is not a party leader. If his resignation has been accepted, it is because the authorities recognize that, as he himself insists, appointments to this post must be handled differently.

Another civil servant or bank official may be nominated for the succession. In that case he should be given a 10-year tenure, so that he can feel properly independent. Alternatively a top figure in the political hierarchy could be chosen — persons whose names have been mentioned like Haim Zadok, or Haim Gvati, or perhaps Yehoshua Rabinowitz himself, if he decides (as rumour has it) to retire from the Finance Ministry.

In the event, neither option is being adopted. The personalities in view to take over from Sanbar are individuals of the same ilk: men with skills and experience but with no power-base. And they will be offered the same limiting term of office as before.

They will, of course, hit up against the same obstacles, with one of two results. If they fight, they will be broken. If they give in, the function of the central bank will become devoid of content. It will sag into just another technical department of the Treasury, which has too many functions concentrated within its grasp as it is.

The country faces here a constitutional problem of some importance. The bank is the most constructive critic of official policy there is. It has been rebuffed of late. If Sanbar could not prevent this setback, no other functionary appointed in his stead will do better. The stalemate may be convenient to the Treasury, harassed as it is by all the pressure-groups which obstruct its work. But it should not be condoned by the Knesset.

How the system works

THE MUALLEM couple from Jerusalem's "Asbestonim" slum, cramped in a prefab with six adults and three newborns, are lucky. Despite the bureaucracy involved, they'll find the home they began seeking before their triplets were born three months ago. Three tiny daughters in a newspaper photo and wide press coverage focus for the reader the blur of "disadvantage."

But what about the other 16,000 Jerusalem families in need of housing and unable to buy flats themselves? Prazot, the state-municipal company in charge of finding housing alternatives for slum dwellers, manages to buy only about 1,100 rental flats a year. In the process, clerks and clients stand on either side of a bureaucratic wall, passing papers through. The alienation reinforces mutual distrust. Since those who need the help most are least articulate in asking for it, a social worker intervenes: she is accused of incitement.

The Prazot management feels that the system works though resources are much too limited. Yet a family loses a housing deal largely because one clerk is in the reserves. Flats are measured only in size, price and amount of leakage, with little regard for the less tangible needs of the families. As one social worker involved in the case said, if a system established to help people increases their pain, something must be wrong with it.

ISRAEL PRESS

AL HAMISHMAR (Mapam) notes that Syrian President Assad, in his address at Damascus University on Tuesday, stressed that "the Palestinians have no legal or any other right to demand the withdrawal of Syrian troops from Lebanon." This implies that Syria no longer recognizes the PLO as the authorized representative of the Palestinian people, the paper says. But regarding the PLO as an enemy to be undermined, despite the opposition of the other Arab states and their ineffective decision to dispatch an inter-Arab force.

HA'ARETZ (independent): "President Assad went out of his way to reaffirm his hostility for Israel. In presenting Syria as the leading country in the struggle for Palestinian liberation, he stressed that Syria continues to regard Israel as its main enemy.

"In attacking Arafat and the terrorist organizations, it was President Assad's intention to justify Syria's military intervention in Lebanon on the Christian side. Stating that he was prepared to take instructions regarding the Syrian presence in Lebanon only from the President and Prime Minister, but not from the Palestinians or any other factor, he was referring to Egypt and the USSR, as well as the terrorist organizations."

A Message to Boys and Girls from the Lubavitcher Rebbe

Last week the Lubavitcher Rebbe, Rabbi Menachem M. Schneerson, addressed a letter "to all Jewish boys and girls under the age of bar-mitzvah and bat-mitzvah." In it, the Rebbe writes that he would like you to carry out the following mitzvot:

- MEZUZAH. See to it that every room in your house has a kosher handwritten mezuzah affixed to the doorpost.
- TORAH STUDY. Learn a little more Torah than you have done until now, including a number of verses by heart.
- TZEDAKAH (CHARITY). Make yourself a tzedakah box, write your name on it, and drop a coin in it every weekday. When it's full, hand it over personally to the worthy cause you have chosen to help.

• AHAVAT YISRAEL. Since it is a mitzvah to love your fellow Jew, do your friends a good turn by sharing the above three mitzvot with them.

• Bein Hametzarim: (literally) implies a state of constraint and feeling of restriction.

AS SPORT FANS around the world are rooting for their national teams at the Montreal Olympics, they are also witnessing a battle in sport between two giants: the U.S. and the USSR.

It is a peaceful struggle for medals, but one in which the starting positions are not equal. As in the past, amateur sportsmen from all over the world are competing with professionals from the USSR and East European countries.

The Kremlin attaches special significance to every international sporting contest, and especially so to the Olympics. Successful performance by Soviet sportsmen is a propaganda weapon. The masses of people are indoctrinated in the idea that achievement in sport is a matter of supreme national prestige. For the ordinary citizen, it is much less of a shock to find basic items unattainable in shops (something to which he is accustomed) than to learn that a national team has done poorly in an international sporting arena.

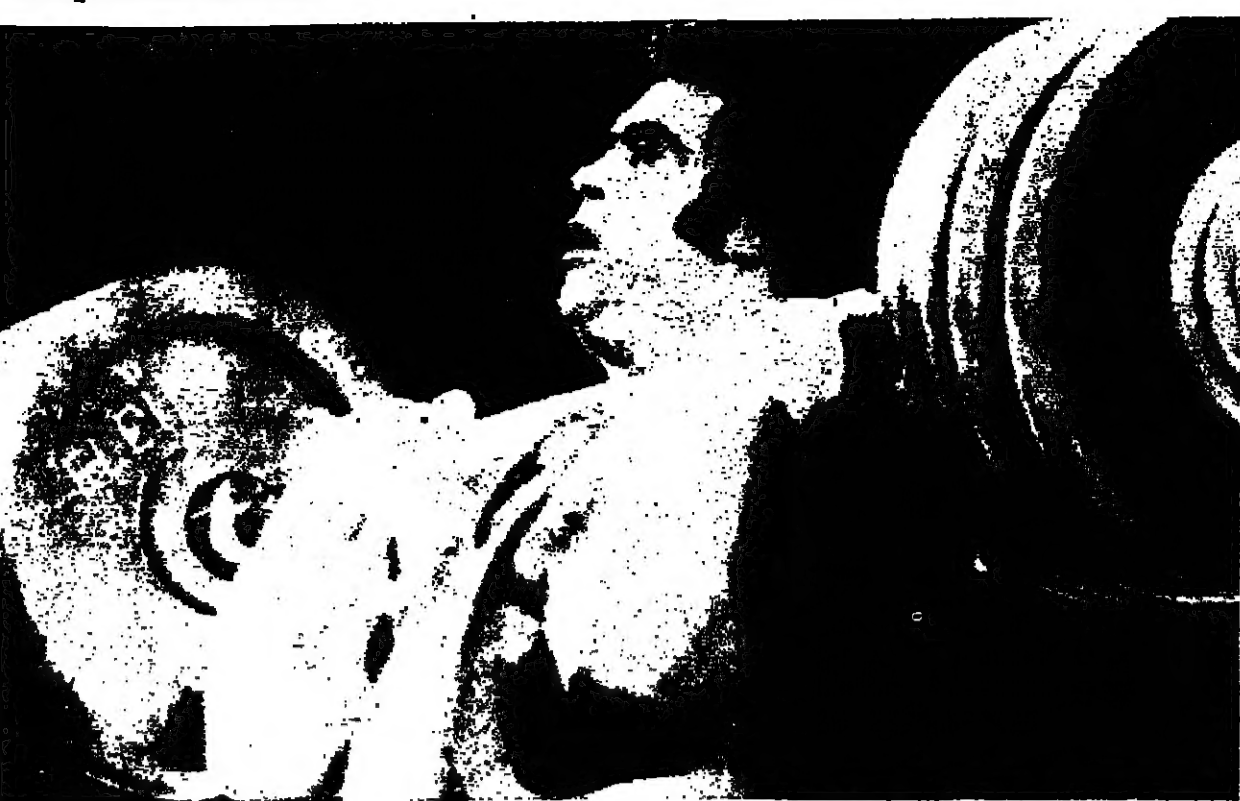

All aspects of Soviet life are tightly controlled, and sport is no exception. The controlling body in sport is the State Committee on Sport, and its importance can be seen in the fact that its chairman reports directly to the Prime Minister. This committee is primarily charged with developing an elite of professional sportsmen to represent the USSR abroad — using special treatment and incentives for the purpose.

It is common knowledge, of course, that technically speaking, professionals are not allowed to compete in the Olympics or any other international amateur event. This, however, is no problem for the Soviet authorities. Its professionals are registered as workers, students, engineers, scientists and so forth. But the sporting Soviet "worker" wouldn't dare touch a lathe, and the "engineer" wouldn't know how to handle the slide-rule. For their true profession is, simply, sport.

These people visit their factory or office twice a month, but only to pick up their salaries. The best of them don't even have to bother this much, as their salaries are transferred directly to their bank accounts.

Unequal starting positions

The Soviet (and East European) athletes who compete in the Olympic events in Montreal are professionals who masquerade as amateurs, says SHIMON MELLEEM, showing how the Kremlin subsidizes its army of sportsmen for competition abroad.

Vasili Alezuev, one of the Soviet Union's champion weight-lifters: amateur in theory, professional in practice.

Their pay is equivalent to an average Soviet salary, but it is neither the only nor the largest component of their income.

There are seven grades of achievement in Soviet sport, and those in the three highest receive extensive benefits from the state. The fifth level is called Master of Sport; the sixth, Master of Sport in an International Class; and the seventh, Honoured Master of Sport. Their benefits include a monthly bonus for so-called "intensified nutrition" to the tune of 150 per cent of an average monthly salary. The state also covers their travelling expenses and pays for their sport equipment and (among other incentives) awards them large cash prizes for victories abroad.

THE SOVIET PUBLIC accepts all this as right and proper. During a recent world hockey championship match in Moscow, Soviet fans were startled to learn that two leading members of the Finnish national team stayed behind "because they had to take university exams." Soviet sportsmen at this level of achievement would receive the diploma without the encouragement of examinations.

When a Soviet team wishes to trade players, it may offer beside money, also such incentives as a diploma from a reputable university.

Sport stars also receive special treatment when they reach the age of military service. Army service is simply a matter of exchanging one's own team shirt for another carrying the Army club's emblem. (This formality of army service stands in stark contrast to what is required of sportsmen in Israel.)

It is the State Committee on Sport which selects sportsmen for event abroad, on the basis of both achievement and loyalty to the regime. The committee enjoys the full cooperation of the KGB in weeding out suspicious characters, but defections nevertheless occur. Because of this, Soviet sportsmen are never allowed to travel abroad with their families, and in Montreal, elsewhere, one can be sure that the athletes are followed by secret police agents.

The Soviets' attention to sport has not always been as rewarding as one might expect. For example, the Kremlin played an active role in getting the International Hockey Federation to ban Canadian players officially registered as professionals. Afterwards, the Soviets, by professionals, masquerading as amateurs, played Canadian amateurs, and beat them. Vastly sure of themselves, the Soviets then tried playing Canadian professional clubs in a series of matches, only to be trounced. This is one of many such cases.

In view of all these facts, those of us watching the Olympics should be added respect for the sportsmen who win against their Soviet and East European counterparts in Montreal. They are true amateurs who have downed professionals.

The author is a recent immigrant from the USSR.

READERS' LETTERS

The aftermath of Entebbe continues

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — As the former bureau chief of Newsweek who served almost two years in Jerusalem, I would like to make the following observations after the spectacular hijack rescue of hostages in Uganda.

This has provided a great tonic to the despondent Israeli people. At the same time, the events in Lebanon have redounded to Israel's benefit and reports from Israel at this time suggest that a mood of euphoria and complacency is now taking over as regards settlement of the outstanding issues with the Arabs.

This worries me and other observers of the scene. I think that what is vitally needed now is for Israel to make an effort to try to bring about a dialogue with Syria and other Arabs, including the Jordanians, for movement toward peace.

I am fully aware that Israel is cognizant of this and is conducting such efforts. But now is the time for Israel to be seen to be doing this — the time for Israel to come up with proposals to take the initiative, not to react to Arab moves and to gain a much-needed leg up on the Arabs in the public relations sense (something Israel is always second best with).

I also realize that the Arabs must come forward to make proposals for peace and that it is unfair to always harp on Israel's efforts or lack of them. I couldn't agree more.

But now is the time to make gain in world public opinion and not to repeat the mistakes of the post-Six Day War when it is argued, Israel could have made proposals that the Arabs would have accepted. In order for Israel not to be so criticized in the future, now is the time not to be complacent. Now is the time to seize any opportunity to negotiate with Syria and other Arabs to achieve some momentum. Whether or not there is any success, it would only work to Israel's advantage now.

JAY AXELBANK

Sir, — Israel is to be highly commended for its gallant commando rescue effort of hostages in the hands of guerrilla terrorists at the Entebbe airport in Uganda. This is the only language plainly understood by revolutionary terrorists and murderers. As a Christian who knows a bit about Jewish history and the place of the Jew in Bible prophecy, I can well understand the fearless stand and gallantry of tiny Israel who, surrounded on all sides by the forces of opposition, stands stiff-backed defending her right to survival.

I would to God that the leadership of my once great country had the old-fashioned backbone being displayed by Israel in dealing with those terrorists and murderers who have forsaken the way of peace and human decency. It's a heart-breaking thing that my once great country is today being pushed around by every cheap little country in the world and even our Ambassadors are being brutally murdered.

Both America and Israel are continually being criticized, condemned, and damned in the United Nations by those who have fallen in love with terrorist murderers and gangsters. America quivers in fear, taking in suits and slaps in the face and all because of so-called world opinion. Israel stands two-fisted and stiff-backed and defends her rights. I say, Mr. Editor, when you are right and know it, world opinion be damned!

ELDER FRED A. PETERS

Sir, — The rescue of the Entebbe Airport hostages by airborne Israeli troops has been greeted with acclamation in many parts of the diminishing civilized world, but I doubt whether the response has been more enthusiastic outside Israel itself than here in South Africa.

DR. GABRIEL SIVAN

Sir, — My profound respect for the members of the Israeli army who took part in the rescue mission at Entebbe, as well as for Mr. Rabin and his Government for taking the right decision.

May I point out to you that this same kind of mission was carried out in 1964 when I served as a paratrooper in the Belgian army. We were flown to the ex-Belgian Congo to free hostages held in different locations by the rebellious government of Christophe Gbenye and Gaston Soumalié. Our first mission was to jump on the airfield of Stanleyville where 350 parachutists freed about 1000 Europeans and other nationalities. The second mission came two days later when we made a jump on the airstrip of Paulis where about 350 hostages were freed.

I can only suppose that the world has forgotten us after 12 years. Let us hope that the same will not happen to the Israeli soldiers.

L. DE DECKER
Jerusalem

Sir, — Once again, we Jewish people in the Diaspora have witnessed that, in times of crisis, we stand alone. It would not be for the people of Israel and its heroic men in the Army. To the officers and men who took part in this historical action, we are all greatly indebted and our thanks are due to them for a magnificent feat executed with brilliance and bravery.

W. GRUBBEL
Johannesburg

Sir, — The Entebbe raid was thrilling and the best news this sick and gutless world with its double standards had heard for a very long time. You are an inspiration to the world. God bless you all and long live Israel!

PORTION OF THE WEEK

Time and chance govern all

Shira: Matot-Massey (Numbers 30:9-36:13)

"NOW THE Reuvenites and Gadites had large and numerous flocks" (Numbers 32:1) — God created three gifts, and if you possess any one of them — wisdom, might, or wealth — you have everything. But that is so only when they have been granted to you by Heaven, and by virtue of Torah. But might and wealth that you have yourself sown are worthless, as Solomon says (Ecclesiastes 9:11): "One more thing I have observed under the sun: the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, time and chance govern all," and as Jeremiah says (9:23-24): "So said God: Let not the sage boast of his wisdom nor the hero of his might nor the rich man of his riches; let the boaster boast only of this: that he understands and knows Me..." And unless they have come from God, these gifts are sure to perish.

This is what happened to the Gadites and Reuvenites, who were wealthy and had numerous flocks, and loved their money, and settled outside Eretz Yisrael (in Transjordan). That is why they were the first of the tribes to be exiled (I Chronicles 5:26) — because on account of their great wealth they had separated themselves from their brethren.

We know that Sennacherib King of Assyria was a world-ruler because he banished populations from here to there and from there to here, as he pleased. He banished Israel to Babylon and transferred Babylonians to Eretz Yisrael. In the Time-to-Come (Omer 30:4), "Even if you are scattered to the end of heaven God your God will gather you from there and fetch you home," and (Isaiah 11:12) "He will assemble Judah's scattered people from the four corners of the earth," and (Isaiah 35:10) "God's ransom shall return, they shall come singing to Zion, crowned with everlasting gladness; joy and gladness shall be their escort and suffering and weariness shall flee away" (Bamidbar Rabbah 2:7, 23:14; Tanhuma: Buber edition, Hukkat 7-8; Echa Rabbati, Pethia 5).

YALKUT SHIMONI comments on tomorrow's Haftara (Jeremiah 3:4-26; 3:4; 4:1-2): "Listen to God's word" — lest you come to hear nothing; listen to the Torah, lest you have to hear Prophecy; listen to Prophecy, lest you have to hear reproof; listen to reproof, lest you find yourself having to listen to the music of idolatry; listen in Eretz Yisrael, lest you have to listen outside the Land.

Don't be like Jack!

Jack Weinfeld almost blew his top when he found out that he had been done in on the word "net premium." You see, he had received a quote from Goshen Insurance Agency for renewing the policy on his three-month old Fiat 127 at an annual premium of ILI.266. His old company also offered to renew the policy at a net premium of ILI.258. However, he was billed by his old company for the amount of ILI.470. He explained to him later on that the quote he got was for the "net premium" and afterwards they added on all the charges for policy fees, registration fees, stamps, etc.... Mr. Weinfeld checked again with Goshen, and he found out that the Goshen net premium was net, that is no other charges on the top of the premium that Goshen quoted.

So don't be like Jack — check carefully the next time you get a quote from Goshen. After all.... nobody comes between you and Goshen. You are always working directly with insurance professionals — people hired and trained to give the kind of service and experience that has kept us No. 1 in
